

CIO ADVISORY SERVICES

When it comes to addressing complex business and technology challenges on a large scale, there is no substitute for experience. Yet many Chief Information Officers (CIOs) find that there are not enough hours in the day for them to personally cover all the executive duties, transformation programs, and still drive IT excellence at every level.

That is when many CIOs find it helpful to retain experienced IT leaders who serve as “CIO-extenders” by monitoring critical change programs and implementations. This added executive-level resource often gives the entire organization a needed boost by accelerating issue resolution and resource allocation decisions. In other cases, the injection of outside experience serves as a source of new ideas and innovative methods of tackling recurring IT problems.

Perhaps, most importantly, finding a trusted advisor can free up the CIO to focus on more strategic and critical issues of the day while delegating many of the important but routine management tasks.

Charley Kiser, President & CEO of C. H. Kiser & Company, has helped clients face these kinds of challenges before. Over the last three decades, he provided leadership and advice to commercial, governmental, and non-profit organizations around the world.

At HP Charley managed executive relationships and IT services for major clients facing industry transformation, market expansion, business start-up, and turn-around challenges. Earlier he led the development of EDS’ global service excellence program for large outsourcing arrangements. And in its formative years Charley was Chairman of the PULSE financial network supporting ATM and debit card services for major banks throughout the Southwestern US.

In 2010 Mr. Kiser launched C. H. Kiser & Company, a management consultancy specializing in business and technology strategies that drive extraordinary results. C. H. Kiser & Company is now offering its expertise to health care industry organizations facing the challenges of 2013 and beyond.
